

Time Span Required For Learning Guitar

Contributed by HusseyJames
Monday, 15 March 2010

For all the guitar freaks out there, it is a dream to play the instrument as skilfully as their rock idols. They want to do this not only to impress others but also for their personal satisfaction and to fulfil their dream in an efficient way. But, it is not possible to learn this art, unless one has the passion inside to do so.
by HusseyJames

For all the guitar freaks out there, it is a dream to play the instrument as skilfully as their rock idols. They want to do this not only to impress others but also for their personal satisfaction and to fulfil their dream in an efficient way. But, it is not possible to learn this art, unless one has the passion inside to do so.

The learning process differs from person to person. Learning to play a guitar can be less time consuming if a learner has a high sense of devotion. A person who is willing to gain the talent of guitar should be regular in practice and be highly determined. A fact that must be very clear to learners is that listening is entirely different from playing. Listening involves only ears for hearing, but playing involves manifestation of mind and time. Learners will also have to tolerate pain in your fingertips, at the initial levels of the learning process. But in the end, you will be rewarded for all these sufferings.

It is a common perception that mastering the art of guitar playing takes years and years, which is true to some extent. But there is good news for those who have a passion for this art but cannot take out much time due to their busy schedules. There are various techniques using which guitar can be learnt in a comparatively shorter span of time.

Nowadays, learners start playing songs on a guitar only in a month by practicing the major and minor chords, and progressions with the help of music theory. One can play songs only in a month, if there is a strong will power and quest for learning.

All the beginners get a fresh and inspirational experience when starting out the lessons. Perfection and flawlessness are achieved with time and dedication, but regular practice is a must. Take the example of a baby; he might fall several times while learning to walk, but finally learns to walk with his efforts and development of leg muscles. Same is the case with guitarists; with time and practice, muscles of your fingers will get used to the strings. In the beginning, some learners may face difficulty and some may give up, but those who are steadfast and practice a lot will surely succeed.

Regular exercises in gym makes the muscles strong; same is the case with guitar. Regular practice makes the finger muscles stronger and harder, so that guitarists can easily make the necessary movements. Purchasing or grabbing a guitar does not make learners a superstar; for becoming perfectionist learners, you will have to go through many phases of learning.

Starting off, there should be one string practice; for self-encouragement, easy and favourite songs should be selected and played. Learners should not jump from one string to another at the initial level; they should move to the next one after achieving full command on the previous one.

String exercise will give learners a practice and skill to play songs, which require multi-string usage. Sooner or later, learners will start performance in front of friends or gatherings. Even after learning to play a guitar, there should be time given to practicing, as practice makes one perfect.

About the Author:

You can view wide range of guitars to Buy guitars online at affordable prices.